A NOTE FROM THE DIRECTOR

There is something strangely mysterious and romantic surrounding the story of Bonnie Parker and Clyde Barrow. There's an air of allure and magic wrapped up in these two star crossed lovers. The first, for me, in being how young they were when they were killed in the fateful shoot-out in Louisiana in 1934. Clyde was 25 and Bonnie only 23. What happened that caused them to turn to a life of crime, albeit a short one? Part of the answer can be found in history, during the Great Depression. This was one of America's worst periods for the working class in our recent history. Most people were without jobs and couldn't find work. The time was dreary, desolate, grey, and hopeless. It was truly a depression in all sense of the word. Then, out of nowhere, came these two, vibrant criminals. They captivated the American public. The media sensationalized these two individuals and added more mystery to their story. Many citizens agreed with their actions – rob the rich banks and putting on a show -- and, of course, many disagreed with them, feeling that they should be treated as the criminals they were.

We don't know what caused these two children to live the life they led. All we can do is speculate. And you, as an audience member, get to look at it with fresh eyes and make your own opinion about Bonnie and Clyde. Were they heroes of the Great Depression? Or were they criminals? The answer is in the story.

Thanks for coming. Please tell your friends. I hope you enjoy Bonnie and Clyde as much as I have, and I will see you in the lobby after the show.

Susan Galli
Director

PRESIDENT'S NOTE

Welcome to our 71st Season at Town and Country Players!

We are thrilled to present a relatively new musical, one of many more contemporary shows we are presenting this season. The show itself bowed on Broadway in 2011, but the story of Bonnie Parker and Clyde Barrow is legendary. Their tale is one that still holds true today because of its themes— the power of family and the danger of celebrity.

Bonnie and Clyde have entered into the status of American Legends, immortalized in books, documentaries and an acclaimed film that bears both their names. It is sometimes forgotten how young they were, 23 and 25, respectively, at the times of their death. And while their impact has been felt and lasted due to the shocking nature of their crimes and their brazen trail into infamy, these two bold individuals were young people. In this modern world of 2018, the voices of our young people are rising loud and clear, and continue to do so. The legends of tomorrow are being borne today in ways, perhaps, less spectacular than those of Ms. Parker and Mr. Barrow, but hopefully with resonance that also lasts for generations.

We hope you enjoy this modern take on a classic story, one that has an undeniable love that runs through it and is a dynamic way to kick off our 71st Season!
